

short bio Jennifer madsen

Jennifer Madsen is an American jazz vocalist, recording artist, producer, and educator whose work bridges tradition and reinvention. Known for her elegant storytelling and deeply embodied performances, she brings a distinctive voice to the American Songbook, blending musical precision with emotional depth.

Her recent recordings include Reimagine (2025) and the forthcoming big band release Girl Talk (2026), created in collaboration with Brent Edstrom and Sam Cardon, and featuring artists such as Sean Jones, Jeff Coffin, and Ryan Keberle. Her debut album Consider Me (1983) is currently being re-released in Japan by P-Vine Records, introducing this early work to a new international audience.

A seasoned performer equally at home in intimate jazz settings and large ensemble collaborations, Madsen is also a dedicated educator and creator of The Performative Singer, where she mentors artists in the craft of vocal storytelling.
